

STEP UP FOR STUDENTS

Response to the 2019 Florida Auditor General report

Some additional facts are necessary to put the findings of the August 2019 Florida Auditor General report of Step Up For Students in the appropriate context. It's important to note the following:

On ensuring Gardiner Scholarship applications are processed accurately. The application processing error at issue, which was quickly corrected, resulted in funding delays of approximately 30 days. It did not result in any Gardiner Scholarship students not receiving funding. The error resulted from a change in processes intended to get Gardiner parents funded more quickly, and the "delay" resulted in families of 583 students still receiving funds at the same time as in previous years. Meanwhile, thousands of Gardiner students received funding earlier than ever before.

On flagging schools participating in scholarship programs for financial review. By law, private schools participating in state scholarship programs must hire independent certified public accountants to conduct financial reviews if they receive more than $250,000 annually in scholarship funds. Step Up For Students monitors the scholarship amounts of nearly 2,000 schools to see if they meet that threshold. We were late in recognizing 12 of them, less than one percent, and the FDOE instructed us to waive the financial review requirement for those schools since that school year had passed.

On using interest earned from tax-credited contributions. As stated in our official response to the Auditor General's report, the statute does not provide any guidance on how that interest can be used. Step Up For Students used $280,000 of that interest for non-FTC scholarship programs. The lion's share was devoted to improving the technological infrastructure needed to efficiently and effectively serve Gardiner Scholarship families, and the rest was used for start-up costs for the new Hope Scholarship and Reading Scholarship Accounts. For context, it is important to note the Legislature has never appropriated any start-up funding for any of the state's K-12 scholarship programs. We continue to believe strongly that we used those funds appropriately, to enhance vital services for the state's most disadvantaged students. But we chose to replace the funds rather than argue with the Auditor General.

On documenting the time worked by salaried personnel. The Auditor General recommends "exempt" employees at Step Up be required to prepare reports of time worked and that supervisors be required to certify the accuracy of those reports. We are fully aware of how much and how hard our salaried employees are working, with many of them often putting in significantly more than 40 hours per week. Requiring additional documentation beyond what is already in place is inappropriate.

One final note. Step Up is audited by the Auditor General every year. Florida school districts are audited once every three years. We are essentially under continuous audit by the AG, since it begins a new audit before the previous year's audit has been completed. We are also required by law to submit a clean audit from an outside accounting firm, every year, to the Florida Board of Education. There is likely no other entity that receives as much scrutiny — inside government or out. This year, for the eighth consecutive year, Step Up earned the top ratings from Charity Navigator, America's largest independent charity evaluator, for accountability, transparency and financial performance. We will continue to diligently administer the state's scholarship programs with the utmost care and integrity.
